YANKEE METHODS.

How a Cuban Has Been Benefited by Following Them.

In the province of Havana, after the departure of the Spanish army, a tobacco planter, named Gonzalez, found himself penniless, his family scattered, his plantation destroyed, and his home and storehouses burned. He had been one of hundreds of victims. Leaving only the waste ground behind, he had fled with his family to escape the further rage of the Spaniards.

Happy even to have life as his sole heritage of the conflict, Gonzalez set about rebuilding his fortunes. He managed to borrow $300 from a friend in Havana. He bought a pair of heavy boots, a few tools, a horse, and some tobacco plants. He made his way through a wilderness to his former home. There was nothing but a growth of weeds and heaps of fallen stones and charred timbers for a welcome; but with energy born of necessity, he began his herculean task. He cleaned up part of the ground and planted it. While he was giving nature (which is kind in Cuba), time to rest, he felled some large palm trees, meantime sleeping in the open air by night. After awhile he built of the palm tree lumber a storehouse for his tobacco. He lived in a part of this house, where he dried the tobacco leaves and prepared them for market. At odd times, he did more clearing and more planting. In all this he was absolutely alone and unaided. He had not made a place for his family, his old laborers had died or were a part of reconcentrado populations, and there was little or no help to be had, even if he could have paid for it. So he toiled on with hope for his companion, as many like him were doing in various parts of the country. The result of his pluck is to be seen to-day in a flourishing plantation, in the improvement of which he has spent $6,000, paid out of the receipts for his crop, which has also yielded enough for his living expenses, and has provided a home for his reunited family.—Emilio Nunez, Civil Governor of Havana, in Success.

NOVEL ADVERTISING PLAN.

Washington Restaurant Man Gave Out Four-Dollar Notes in Change.

The officials of the secret service bureau in Washington were kept busy the other day in explaining the use of so-called $4 notes by the proprietor of a local restaurant. The report had been circulated that the proprietor was violating the law. The "$4 notes" consisted of sheets of four $1 bills, just as they came from the press at the bureau of engraving and printing. Shortly before the holidays the restaurant man circulated an advertisement in which he offered the greatest of holiday novelties, "new $4 notes." He announced that in giving change to his customers when bills sufficiently large to warrant it were tendered him he would give each of them a new "$4 note."

The card was a drawing one. The shrewd host was besieged with requests for the new notes, and the demand soon exceeded the supply. A great many persons really expected to get $4 notes. Others knew that such could not be the case, for the reason that the government had never issued any notes of that denomination. Quite a number expected to find the whole thing a hoax and were surprised when they learned that the man was giving out "$4 notes" in accordance with his advertisement, that is, sheets containing four $1 notes.

Several persons assumed that he was violating the law, and reported the matter to the secret service bureau. Each of them was informed by the secret service officers that there was nothing illegal in the restaurant man's action. The secretary of the treasury is allowed by law to give out sheets of four $1 notes before they are cut, to persons of good standing who may desire them as curiosities or souvenirs, in exchange for other money representing the face value of the notes.

Valuable Corundum Discoveries.

Corundum is first cousin to the sapphire and the ruby, but lacks their brilliance of color and transparency. It is a most excellent abrasive material, better than emery, which is impure corundum, in that respect, but hitherto its rarity has made it too high-priced for general use. Recently valuable deposits of corundum have been found in the mountains north of Kingston, Ontario, and it is hoped they will furnish a large supply of the mineral. Traces of sapphire have been found among the deposits, but as yet no specimens of the precious blue gem have revealed themselves.
